TYLER KESTNER, PRESIDENT AND OWNER

“We pride ourselves on excellent communication, customer service and craftsmanship.”

SOLID CONSTRUCTS

- What motivates you?
Facing challenging situations head-on and delivering a skillfully completed project to a happy client.
- What advice would you give to someone starting out in the industry?
Find a mentor or two who can help you throughout your career and be open to learning new ideas and ways of working.
- What's new?
We started construction on our first net-zero home, which is a real adventure and is propelling us into the next generation of home construction.

Top With its freestanding tub, double vanity and walk-in shower, this luxurious primary bath blends clean, contemporary design with nature's most stunning views.
Bottom This game room is the perfect spot for family and friends to catch a sporting event, indulge in some friendly competition and make lasting memories.

An inherent understanding of quality and craftsmanship paired with expert skills and fearless determination are the keys to building a great construction firm. As the owner and president of Apollo Builders, Tyler Kestner checks all of those boxes. “Growing up, I worked for my father’s custom home building company during the summers,” Kestner says. “He taught me every facet of the business and showed me the importance of doing things right the first time. So, when I launched Apollo in 1988, I was able to apply those lessons to my own work and establish an excellent reputation for luxury remodeling and new builds.” The confidence Kestner gained from his experiences also imbued him with a sense of tenacity. “Although Apollo is a small, boutique firm, we challenge ourselves to take on big projects and work closely with architects, designers and homeowners to create groundbreaking designs.”
